If I had the power to change the world, I would eliminate the gap between rich and poor. One way to eliminate the gap would be the introduction, around the world, of money that decreases in value over time. That way, the rich will spend their money quickly, leaving no money on hand, and the money will be available to the poor. Consequently, the gap between rich and poor will disappear and many of the world's problems, such as food shortages and population growth, could be solved. If poor people can have as much money as rich people, they will not be hungry again. Furthermore, if poor families escape from poverty, they will not need to have a lot of children. As a result, the population in the world will be smaller. So, if I were given the power to change the world, I would remove the gap between haves and have-nots. (152 words)
