IV. 次の英文の空所に入れるのに最も適切な語句を、(ア)～(エ)の中から一つ選び、その記号をマークしなさい。

I finished reading the Oxford English Dictionary (OED) at 2:17 PM on July 18, 2007. My initial reaction was incredulity mixed with glee, followed by a surprising sense of (27). Why was this surprising? Because I still felt that I did not do anything concrete. All I did was sit down and read for a year, admittedly in a fairly persistent and ferocious fashion. Whether I deserved it or not, I got up and danced a small jig of triumph, startling some mice who had been creeping toward the sandwich in my backpack.

After I finished dancing my jig, I sat there and debated whether or not I wanted to read the bibliography. I told myself that it is not really part of the dictionary, and that furthermore, I'd already read all the names of the authors and their books as I went through the dictionary. And it is only a partial bibliography. That night over dinner I told my wife Alix that I was finished reading. She asked, "How was the bibliography?"

I replied in as (28) a way as I could manage that I'd decided not to read it. She gave me that steady look that is so quietly (29) of disapproval and after a moment said, "You are going to say that you read the whole OED and you are not going to read the bibliography?" The next day I began reading again.

Immediately I realized that I should have read the bibliography before reading Z, as this was not quite the exultant and (30) manner of finishing this project that I had envisioned. It is almost impossible to read, dull on such a (31) level that I had immense trouble getting through even a few pages at a time. The bibliography has no overt (32). It was about as exciting as reading the family tree of someone you do not know or care about at all.

The bibliography has no definitions to (33) at, no etymologies to leave me scratching my head in either wonderment or bafflement, no occasional editorial clucking to make me laugh. It contains none of the (34) or wit, or temperamental oddities that make up the previous twenty-one-thousand-odd pages. It is really nothing but a mildly interesting and very long list, and the more I tried to read through it the more it became clear that there was indeed only one important conclusion it could impart to me.

I missed reading the OED.

V. 次の英文を読んで、下の問いに答えなさい。

According to cognitive dissonance theory, there is a tendency for individuals to seek consistency among their cognitions (i.e. beliefs, opinions). When there is an inconsistency between attitudes or behaviors (dissonance), something must change to eliminate the dissonance. Dissonance can be reduced in one of three ways.

First, individuals can change one or more of the attitudes, behavior, beliefs etc. so as to make the relationship between the two elements a (35) one. When one of the dissonant elements is a behavior, the individual can change or eliminate the behavior. However, this mode of dissonance reduction frequently presents problems for people, as it is often difficult for people to change (36) behavioral responses (e.g. giving up smoking).

A second cognitive method of reducing dissonance is to acquire new information that outweighs the dissonant beliefs. For example, thinking smoking causes lung cancer will cause dissonance if a person smokes. However, new information such as "research has not proved definitely that smoking causes lung cancer" may reduce the dissonance.

A third way to reduce dissonance is to reduce the importance of the cognitions (i.e. beliefs, attitudes). A person could convince (あ) that it is (い) to (う) than to (え). In other words, he could tell himself that a short life filled with smoking and sensual pleasures is better than a long life devoid of such joys. In this way, he would be decreasing the importance of the dissonant cognition (e.g. smoking is bad for one's health).

Notice that dissonance theory does not state that these modes of dissonance reduction will actually work, only that individuals who are in a state of cognitive dissonance will take steps to reduce the extent of their dissonance. One of the points that dissonance theorists are fond of making is that people will (39) go to all sorts of lengths to reduce dissonance.

The theory of cognitive dissonance has been widely researched in a number of situations to develop the basic idea in more detail, and various factors have been identified which may be important in attitude change. Life is filled with decisions, and decisions (as a general rule) arouse dissonance. For example, suppose you had to decide whether to accept a job in an absolutely beautiful area of the country, or turn down the job so you could be near your friends and family. Either way, you would experience dissonance. (40) for the beautiful streams, mountains, and valleys.

Both alternatives have their good points and bad points. (41) The thing is that making a decision cuts off the possibility that you can enjoy the advantages of the unchosen alternative, yet it assures you that you must accept the disadvantages of the chosen alternative.

People have several ways to reduce dissonance that is aroused by making a decision. One thing they can do is to change the behavior. As noted earlier, this is often very difficult, so people frequently employ a variety of mental maneuvers. A common way to reduce dissonance is to increase the attractiveness of the chosen alternative and to decrease the attractiveness of the rejected alternative. This is referred to as "spreading apart the alternatives."

問 7 下線部(41)の伝えようとする意味と最も近い文を、(ア)～(エ)の中から一つ選び、その記号を(41)にマークしなさい。

(ア) The bottom line is that decision making necessarily brings a chance of choosing the disadvantageous alternative rather than the other one which may be more advantageous.

(イ) It is a problem that making a decision always means losing the advantages of the unchosen choice and receiving the disadvantages of the chosen one.

(ウ) It is ironic that choosing one alternative even after careful consideration makes us regret not choosing the other one which may seem more advantageous later.

(エ) The fundamental difficulty in making decisions is that we will never get the possible advantages of what we select and accept disadvantages of what we don't choose.

問 8 本文の内容から最も正しいものを、(ア)～(エ)の中から一つ選び、その記号を(42)にマークしなさい。

(ア) The dissonance theory has been studied so widely that many aspects of the issue have yet to be clarified.

(イ) Dissonance in cognition is a natural phenomenon which may happen to anybody at any time and can be eliminated effectively by various measures.

(ウ) We face many decisions in our daily lives, and in most cases, these will cause dissonance.

(エ) An inconsistency among behaviors and beliefs may lead to a person's mental instability. Therefore, the elimination system automatically starts functioning to overcome this mental disharmony.
