Foreigners often praise the Japanese [31] their honesty and kindness. The Japan Times frequently carries letters to the editor, recounting how objects [32] in trains and public places are returned by Japanese individuals.

I have personally experienced such honesty and kindness twice. Once I left a valuable scroll in a taxi. Within twenty-four hours it was in my hands once again. [33] another occasion, I lost my wallet in a train. It, too, was returned promptly, [34]. Such cases are not [35] by grateful foreigners. One would never think of putting one's briefcase in the overhead rack in an American or European train. It might be gone [36].

Japanese going abroad should be careful [37] their possessions for even [38]. Several of my Japanese friends have had their valuables [39] abroad, to their great [40]. Japanese embassies often handle such cases of theft. When checking in at an airport, for example, one must never leave a briefcase on the floor [41]. One should carry one's valuables [42].

The Japanese are not so honest, however, in paying taxes on land and income. Each year, the newspapers are [43] statistics giving the number of doctors, dentists, and landowners [44] evade taxes. This, however, can be said of Westerners [45]. No one likes paying taxes!
