Imagine a painting of a prince on horseback set in a heavy gold frame in a roomful of richly-dressed people willing to pay millions of dollars for it. The art world can seem, to those on the outside, to be one of showy glamour, involving vast amounts of money in numerous currencies. It is also somewhat shrouded in mystery. Relatively few have experienced bidding in a live auction and actually know how art changes hands. ^(A)

An auction is a place where some of the rarest, most spectacular, and sought-after items, referred to as lots, can be purchased. Works of fine art are, in general, bought and sold in auction houses. The first auction of an art collection is believed to have been held in London's Covent Garden in 1742. It was viewed as an alternative to the privately-invited sales that were the norm at the time, held in the houses of the very rich and deemed by both sellers and potential buyers to be time-consuming and inefficient. In the subsequent 20 years, two of the world's largest and most famous auction houses were founded in London: Sotheby's and Christie's.

The process of buying or selling an art piece in a modern-day auction still resembles that of the 18th century. A collector wishing to sell a painting by the artist Picasso, [1], first contacts the relevant specialist in the fine art department of an auction house to obtain an estimated value; let us imagine US$500,000 for the painting. They then decide the reserve price (the lowest price that the seller would accept), say US$400,000. The auction house advises the seller on a realistic reserve price as unsold lots do not bring in any revenue at all. In addition, they confirm the seller's premium, which is a percentage of the final selling price the auction house charges the seller: commonly 10 percent. Following an agreement on the terms by both auction house and seller, shipping is arranged from the seller to the auction house in preparation for a pre-sale appraisal and photographing for catalogs.

On the day of the auction, those presiding over the proceedings arrive at the venue, along with potential buyers who register and are given numbered auction cards to use in bidding. The auctioneer sets the opening bid of the first item, upon which potential buyers raise their auction cards if interested in buying at that price. Once a bid has been made, the auctioneer will call out prices that rise incrementally, for example by US$5,000 each time. When no further bids are made, the auctioneer will call out "Sold!" and hit a block of wood with a hammer before moving to the next lot. In the days following the auction, other staff members move into action. The process of repacking and shipping begins, with sold lots beginning their journeys to new owners, and the necessary payments are made. ^(B)

Throughout the years, there have been a number of record-breaking auction sales. One of the most attention-grabbing sales occurred in 1987 when the Yasuda Fire and Marine Insurance company in Tokyo paid just under US$40 million for a painting from Van Gogh's Sunflowers series, some of the most famous paintings of all time. 2017 saw a work by Leonardo Da Vinci achieve the highest amount ever paid for a painting at auction. The lot, titled Salvator Mundi, was bought through Christie's New York for over US$450 million. ^(C)

With 29 percent of all fine art sales coming from online bids in 2019, like many businesses, auction houses have had to adapt to the times. The image of an auctioneer commanding a sale in a busy auction house, surrounded by raised hands clutching bidding cards, may not have drastically changed over the centuries. However, while auction houses will likely continue to be profitable businesses, it is far less certain whether they will retain their traditional look and feel over the coming decades.

Sales Clerk: Good morning, sir. Is there something in particular you're looking for?

Mr. Gregory: My secretary called this morning. The name is Gregory. Paul Gregory.

Sales Clerk: Ah, Mr. Gregory, we've been expecting you. We'll be measuring you for a three-piece suit today. Your secretary indicated that you were keen on one with a *herringbone pattern in blue; is that correct?

Mr. Gregory: Yes, in a royal blue. A similar cut to this one, but a two-button instead of a three. It's for a somewhat informal event.

Sales Clerk: Very good, sir. If you'd care to step over there to the left, Jeffrey will get you measured. And in the meantime, I'll pick out some cloth samples for you to mull over. Jeffrey, could I ask you to take Mr. Gregory's measurements?

Jeffrey: Certainly; right this way. Mr. Gregory, if I could ask you to hang your arms down naturally by your sides—yes, that's perfect; thank you. Next, I'll just need to take some more measurements. And that just about covers it. All done! Would you care to take a seat at the table over there? Jonathan will be right back.

Sales Clerk: Sorry to keep you waiting, Mr. Gregory. I've picked out three cloth samples which I think would fit the occasion: two herringbones and a houndstooth. The first two are simple woven fabrics, while the third is woven with thicker yarns that bring out the rather original pattern. Needless to say, all of our pieces are finished by hand here in the shop.

Mr. Gregory: I can't say I'm a fan of this houndstooth. Somewhat too young for me. I'm leaning towards the first, I think. Simple, yet classic. The second looks like something a lawyer would wear, don't you think? Yes, I'll stick with tradition, and go with this first herringbone in this shade. No, actually, I think I'll go a touch lighter in color, it being summer and all. The first one in Azure Royal.

Sales Clerk: Splendid choice, sir. The structuring, cutting, and stitching will take three weeks, at which point we'll ask you to come back to the shop at your convenience for the fitting, which won't take more than 45 minutes. It will be ready for delivery or collection three to four days later. In rare cases, there may be a need for a further fitting.

Mr. Gregory: That sounds acceptable. As soon as the suit is ready for fitting, please contact my secretary, who will rearrange my day so that I'll be able to come back immediately.

Sales Clerk: Many thanks, Mr. Gregory. Jeffrey and I look forward to welcoming you back for your fitting.

*herringbone: ヘリンボーン(布地の織り方の一種)

houndstooth: 千鳥格子(模様的一种)

Stewart: Hi, and welcome to Darby House! I'm Stewart, the residence supervisor.

Dave: Hi! It's good to finally get here! It was a long ride.

Stewart: How long were you on the road this morning?

Dave: Well, usually it's about two hours from home, but with the holiday weekend traffic, it was closer to three hours.

Owen: Hi, I'm Owen, and I've got my dad here with me helping me to move in today.

Stewart: Great. I'll show you where your room is. You're on the men's floor—the first floor. Most of the guys there are studying engineering. You are, too, right?

Owen: That's right, mechanical engineering. First year.

Dave: Is the first floor all first-year students, as well?

Stewart: First- and second-year students, actually. We have a "buddy system" where we try to match first-year and international students with second-year students. That way, new students have someone to go to if they have any questions.

Owen: Great idea. I'm sure I'll have a lot of questions.

Stewart: Let me check. Yeah, you're matched with Connor. He hasn't arrived yet, but I'll let him know you're here, and he'll give you a shout.

Owen: Great. Any questions, Dad?

Dave: Actually, yeah, a few. Is there a set of residence rules or anything like that?

Stewart: There sure is. Rules are posted on the back of each dormitory room door. Once we get to the room, I'll brief you on those. We're almost there. Yes, Room 114.

Owen: Wow, this room is tiny! But maybe I can make it work.

Stewart: Yeah, and you have access to the common area. There's a small kitchen there as well, but, as you know, we have our meals prepared for us in the cafeteria.

Dave: What kind of noise rules are there? What about a curfew?

Stewart: Oh, good questions. There's no curfew, so students don't have to come back to the residence by a certain time. However, there is to be no noise in the halls after 11:00 p.m. throughout the week. Students can use the common room after that, but the door has to be closed. Students should also adhere to the chore schedule posted for cleaning the small kitchen off the common room.

Dave: Got it. Thanks.

Bike-share systems have steadily grown in popularity worldwide. In these systems, people borrow a bicycle from a bike-share station and can return it to any other station belonging to the same system. One bike-share company distributed 500 bikes to each of five cities as a test trial.
